Good Citizenship

A bank account makes a good citizen. That's a broad assertion but it is universally true.

A good citizen is one who is independent, self supporting, and who does things conducive to the best interests of the community. The man who has a bank account is independent, he is thrifty, he is able to pay his way and he contributes to the general wealth of his community. His funds are in circulation. He pays taxes and helps to make things go. Likewise a man who has money and property in a community is anxious to see that the community prospers. We poll for the man with a bank account.
